

IS THIS THE FACE OF JAMES FOLEY EXECUTIONER?

The ISIS Butcher

The ISIS Rapper

Peter Adamis 25 August 2014. According to recent news reports the identification of James Foley executioner has been made. At this stage the alleged killer suspect is none other than : Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, otherwise known as Lyricist Jinn Matic.

He appears to have a face book page which interestingly enough is still open as indicated in the image left. One can only assume that the main reason why the account has not been closed is to enable security agencies to monitor the traffic and observe any potential illegal Jihadist recruiting. However a glimpse at the account appears that it has not been in use for some time. The last topic being presumably on the 10 March 2014 which states: "Pagan newspapers at it again...smh. You got nothing better to write about or you love me?" Whilst another is a reference to his mother: "my mum the sickest person i know"

Security agencies and law enforcement agencies involved in identifying the execution style killing of James Foley are to be commended for an extremely fine job in identified the alleged killer. One can only assume that face, eye, voice, skeletal and audio identification was involved along with animation software to identify the killer. It would also appear that Western style Jihadist are amongst the worst of the bunch of fighters involved in Syria and Iraq and it is no wonder that there are negotiations going on between the USA, Iran, Syria and Iraq to jointly work together for the utter destruction of ISIS and whom they represent. If it is one thing that will unite all three, it is the growing menace of ISIS and the instability to paving the way towards [peace in the Middle East.

What is also of interest is the reluctance of Turkey to stop the western jihadist from slipping into Syria and Iraq to join the ISIS menace. Turkey is neighbours with the nations that are battling ISIS and it is also supposed to be an ardent supporter of the USA in bring out peace and stability in the region. Is this because approximately 10% of the ISIS jihadist are Turkish citizens or is it part of a greater and sinister plan to expand the borders of Turkey at the expense of its neighbours. It is no secret that Turkey has always dreamed of expanding its borders by any means since it lost its Ottoman dominions the past 200 years.

Whatever the case maybe, the USA appears to have realised its error in backing the wrong fighters in the Middle east and are taking steps, albeit slow ones at that to remedy the situation. The British government in conjunction with other nations that have indicated their abhorrence of the evils carried out by the ISIS Jihadists will be working in unison to end the ISIS crisis and bring about their destruction. The action being taken by these nations is a direct message to those contemplating on joining the ISIS brigade in a war that is not of their own choosing, should think twice.

Every ISIS fighter who were foolish enough to think that they can hide behind a mask or a cloth dyed in black is fooling themselves at a time when there are technologies in place to identify them. They are equally foolish in thinking that advertising their activities via social media in an attempt to recruit others to their cause. In doing so they placed themselves in the spot light and allowed themselves to be recognised whether they were masked or not. One can also assume that the reason that the ISIS brigade moved into Iraq, a country that was recovering from its domestic battles was that it was considered easy pickings once the USA and its coalition partners had left the scene. ISIS were failing to make ground in Syria after losing battles and squabbling with other Syrian rebels who did not want to have anything to do with ISIS and their extremist ideologies.

Nations around the world are quickly strengthen their internal and external listening posts and enhancing their laws by creating legislation to monitor, identify, prevent and contain any potential home grown threats. Australia being one of them was one of the first nations to take positive action to ensure the security of its citizens, its way of life and its borders against any [potential terrorist acts. In Victoria it is unfortunate at this stage that the Muslim community have failed to address these issues and come to the table to discuss such matters with the Australian Prime Minister, Tony Abbott, However having said that I am quite sure that commonsense will prevail and discussions will take place. After all it is un-Australian not to be play ones part when we are all on the same team.

RAPPER IDENTIFIED AS JAMES FOLEY'S EXECUTIONER: REPORTS

British intelligence agencies MI5 and MI6 have identified the man suspected of the horrific beheading of American journalist James Foley, according to UK media reports.

The hooded man with an English accent is believed to be 23-year-old Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, known to fellow Islamic State militants as Jihadi John. The former rapper left his family home in an affluent west London suburb last year to fight in the civil war in Syria.

Murdered: American journalist James Foley. Photo: AP. In early August he tweeted a photo of himself wearing military camouflage and a black hood, while holding a severed head in his left hand. British SAS forces are hunting Mr Foley's killers, using a range of high-tech equipment to track him down and potentially free other hostages.

The Mail on Sunday is reporting that a "significant force" of SAS personnel has been deployed to northern Iraq over the past two days, joining local units fighting IS. They have fanned out into four-man teams, accompanying Iraqi and Kurdish troops in an effort to find British jihadis. The Sunday Times reports that Bary is the key focus of the man hunt. He is one of the British jihadis former hostages referred to as the Beatles because of their British accents. The two others were called "George" and "Ring". The two other Britons suspected of involvement in the crime are Aine Davis, a former drug dealer who converted to Islam, and Dr Saul Islam, a disgraced medic with extremist links.

Bary is the son of an Egyptian-born militant who is awaiting trial on terrorism in Manhattan, due to his alleged involvement in the bombing of US embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998. Before leaving the family home to fight in Syria, Bary was an aspiring rapper known as L Jenny whose music was played on one of the UK's most popular radio stations, BBC Radio 1.

Recordings of his songs will prove vital to the investigating team, with experts using voice recognition technology to match his voice with that of the man who brutally decapitated Mr Foley. Bary made a number of music videos for his songs, with titles such as Flying High, Dreamer and Overdose. It is believed he was indoctrinated by an Islamic preacher named Ange Chuddar who persuaded him to join the fight in Syria.

ISLAMIC STATE EXECUTIONER OF JAMES FOLEY - 'JOHN' FROM LONDON

Ari Suffer 21 August 2014

James Foley appears in video soon before his execution. Beheading of US journalist James Foley by a British Islamist, highlights the prominent role played by British Muslims in the Islamic State.

British and American intelligence services are hunting for the Islamic State jihadist who beheaded an American journalist, and have identified him as a British Muslim extremist known as "John", according to the Telegraph. "John" is said to be the leader of a contingent of British fighters for IS nicknamed "The Beatles", due to their British nationality, and is described as "well-educated, intelligent, but highly committed member of the extremist terror group."

It comes amid revelations that British Muslims make up a quarter of the Islamic State's contingent of European fighters, accounting for around 500 out of the 2,000 European citizens currently fighting among its ranks. While dozens of other European and western nationals are also fighting for IS (formerly known as ISIS), the disproportionate number of UK citizens travelling to fight under the black banner of jihad is once again drawing questions over how radical Islam has been allowed to fester unchecked in Britain for decades.

Foreign intelligence agencies have reportedly been frustrated by MI5 and MI6's ineffectiveness in dealing with home-grown Islamist radical. In June, the CIA sent a special contingent of agents to investigate the extent of Islamic extremism in the UK, in a snub to British intelligence agencies. Last year, it was revealed that French intelligence had targeted London-based Islamic cleric and Al Qaeda-linked terrorist Abu Hama for a potential assassination, out of frustration with growing British indifference to Islamist terrorism. Abu Hama was eventually extradited to the US and jailed this year for serious terrorist offenses.

Britons have carried out numerous atrocities for the group, including suicide bombings. Most recently, the executioner of America journalist James Foley spoke with a clear London or south England accent. Alarmingly, it is not the first time a British-born jihadi has been involved in a gruesome beheading: US journalist Daniel Pearl was decapitated by in Pakistan by British-born Islamist Ahmed Omar Saied Sheikh in 2002. Professor Anthony Glees, of the Centre for Security and Intelligence Studies at the University of Buckingham, told Britain's The Independent that political correctness had helped provide a fertile breeding ground for Islamism in the UK.

"Why are there Brits there? In my view this is because Islamist extremist ideologies have been able to be spread with relative ease in our country under the cover of 'religion', 'free speech' and 'multiculturalism'." "A small number of British Muslims have been brainwashed by so-called preachers... and convinced that they must kill to create a global caliphate," he added. Muslim extremists wishing to volunteer for the Islamic State have found an easy passage to Syria by flying to Istanbul in Turkey, and from there crossing the porous southern border, according to Charlie Cooper, a researcher at the Quilliam Foundation, which monitors and combats Muslim extremism.

Cooper noted that the British man who beheaded Foley "will have committed himself entirely to furthering the aims of the Islamic state" and "completely rejected his British nationality". ISIS fighters regularly stage public burnings of their passports in a rejection of all things non-Muslim, and the new "Islamic State" or "Caliphate" has even reportedly issued its own passports. Shiraz Maher, a senior researcher at the International Centre for the Study of Radicalization at King's College London, said the fact that a British Islamist was chosen to behead Foley proves that UK nationals make up "some of the most vicious and vociferous fighters" in Syria and Iraq,

British Muslims are "very much at the forefront of this conflict," said Maher, who has been closely monitoring the evolution of Syrian jihadi groups. "Unfortunately the British participation in the conflicts now raging in both Syria and Iraq has been one of full participation, one that has seen them at the front lines, taking part in the conflict in every way," he told The Daily Mail. "So we have seen British fighters out there operating as suicide bombers, we have seen them operating as executioners. "Unfortunately they are amongst some of the most vicious and vociferous fighters who are out there. That is unfortunately just a part of their radicalisation."

INSIDE THE MIND OF JAMES FOLEY'S ISIS EXECUTIONER

Dr. Keith Aglow August 21, 2014 Fox News

It would be convenient to think of the man who beheaded American journalist James Foley as an unthinking monster who had no ability to feel anything when he wielded his long knife. This, however, would underestimate the psychopathology and the threat of the Islamic State. Foley's executioner has a family, almost certainly has friends and obviously has a political and world view. He may well have wept at the loss of a relative to an illness in the past. He may have worried over a child's difficulty learning to read. He has probably laughed heartily at jokes. He may have read poetry and philosophy, or, perhaps, written both.

The truly terrifying psychology of the ISIS executioner is that none of his humanity is applied to Americans, or Jews, or Christians, or women who will not cover themselves or who insist on expressing themselves, or anyone who resists his belief system.

The truly terrifying psychology of the ISIS executioner is that none of his humanity is applied to Americans, or Jews, or Christians, or women who will not cover themselves or who insist on expressing themselves, or anyone who resists his belief system. His line in the sand separates worthy human beings from those lost, evil souls whose failure to accept the Prophet Muhammad and live according to a particular interpretation of fundamentalist Islamic law makes them no different from vampires who can infect the rest of the human race with venom and claim them for the plague.

In the executioner's mind, you can't kill a vampire; he's already dead. Mr. Foley's executioner didn't worry over wielding his knife. Inside his mind, he was helping to stop an epidemic of evil – chiefly, American Christians and Jews and atheists and gays and bikini-clad women and, yes, decent law-abiding, God-fearing, peace-loving Muslims.

Seen this way, the ISIS executioner was in the grip of a psychotic delusion. He wasn't killing a real person; he was killing a monster – a spiritually dead, infectious vampire intent on cajoling him into letting him live in order to sully others and turn the world into a Godforsaken wasteland of sin. To the ISIS executioner, Foley's very existence, his words and even his voice were of the devil – derived from twisted, infectious thoughts designed to twist the minds and hearts of others.

You can't reason or negotiate from a distance with a person in the grip of a psychotic delusion that defines others as the evil vectors of a horrifying plague. The delusion owns that person's mind. You might be able to intervene with antipsychotic medications, if the person were captured. (Literally, I mean that such medication might work.) Nor can you believe that loss of life or limb or land or treasure will frighten that person. He believes he is immortal and as rich as a king, so long as he does not yield.

The only way to stop the ISIS executioner and those in the grip of the same psychotic delusion is to kill the ones who cannot be captured, wherever they can be found, in whatever numbers possible. And then it is imperative to be on the lookout for spread of the delusion underground and cell by cell, even during periods of seeming quiet, like a malignant cancer that, unmonitored, may travel a great distance from the primary tumour and re-establish itself.

We should know now that homicidal, psychotic delusions can grip whole cultures; witness the Third Reich. And the fact that they may be born of psychological forces like underlying feelings of disempowerment affecting a nation or a generation is a matter for scholars to debate after the psychosis has been turned back. For now, our doctors are Navy SEALs, and our antipsychotics are Black Hawks, and we cannot believe for one moment that the psychosis will not spread and threaten us all with delusional assassins who are reading poetry and looking at the stars and hugging their kids and dreaming of slicing our throats and those of our children from ear to ear, in order to save the world.

THE SCUM STOLE OUR CASH

DAILY MAIL REPORTER 9 March 2014

'Hip hop jihadist' who left £1m London home to fight in Syria complains on Twitter of being kidnapped, tortured and robbed by FELLOW Islamists. A British rapper who joined rebels fighting the Syrian regime has claimed he was kidnapped, tortured and robbed by members of rival Islamic terror groups. Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, 23, walked out of his family's £1million home in Maida Vale, west London, last year to join militant groups, telling them he was 'leaving everything for the sake of Allah'. Now Bary - whose music has featured on BBC Radio 1 - has posted on Twitter that he and another Briton were abducted and robbed, with their money, phones and guns stolen by other jihadists.

'Hip-hop jihadist': Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, 23, walked out of his family's £1million home in Maida Vale, west London, last year to join militant groups, telling them he was 'leaving everything for the sake of Allah'. Bary walked out of the family home last year in order to join rebels fighting in Syria. Since then he has been tweeting under the names 'Terrorist' and 'Abu Kalashnikov' though his account is now suspended.

Bary, who posts under the name 'Terrorist', said: 'Me & Abu Hussein al Britani got kidnapped /tortured by FSA/IF scum they stole our 4 ark's and a 7mm, my vehicle & our phones and cash.' The tweet was posted last month. A Foreign Office spokesman said he had no details on the claims. Friends said Bary - an aspiring rapper on the 'grime' music scene - grew increasingly radical and violent after mixing with thugs linked to hate preacher Ange Chuddar.

He has posted a series of photographs online, including shots of him masked and posing with guns under the title 'soldier of Allah'. In other messages he called on Allah to 'grant us martyrdom', and praised Osama Bin Laden. Bary, whose music has featured on Radio 1, is one of six children of Adel Abdul Bary, 53.

Bary launched a twitter rant against anti-terror police who raided his family home in west London calling them 'chuffer' (non-believers) and pagans. Bary Snr was extradited from Britain to the US in 2011 after an eight-year legal battle that made him a cause celebre of the Left as lawyers took his publicly funded case to the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg. Investigators believe Bary Snr was one of Bin Laden's closest lieutenants in the infancy of Al Qaeda and ran a London cell of the terror network. He faces life in prison if convicted of involvement in the bombings of US embassies in East Africa in 1998. His son's appearance among the ranks of UK jihadists in Syria, where several Britons fighting for the militants have already been killed, will add to concerns about their potential threat to the West.

L-Majed Abdel Bary raps

'Tortured': It has been claimed that Bary - whose music has featured on BBC Radio One - and another Briton were abducted and robbed, with their money, phones and guns stolen by other jihadists. Bary lived with his mother Raga for more than a decade in a home in Maida Vale, owned by Westminster Council. If it were sold on the open market it would be worth £1million. She travelled to Britain from Egypt in 1990 after her husband was granted refugee status.

Friends said Barry's conversion to radical Islam happened as he grew increasingly frustrated with the British authorities over the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. And it came despite his fledgling success on the underground grime music scene, where he rapped under the names Lyricist Jinn and L Jenny Bary appeared in dozens of videos, including one in which he posed outside the Bank of England and declared his allegiance to the global hacking group Anonymous.

Connection: Friends said Bary - an aspiring rapper on the 'grime' music scene - grew increasingly radical and violent after mixing with thugs linked to hate preacher Ange Cheddar (pictured) On July 1 last year, he announced that he was turning his back on music as 'I have left everything for the sake of Allah'. It is understood that soon afterwards he travelled to Syria, where one of his oldest friends had already joined the fighting.

He changed his Twitter name to Soldier of Allah and posed for pictures wearing a mask and military fatigues while carrying an AK-47 and other large assault rifles. Last November he said, 'Oh Allah, grant us martyrdom' and praised Bin Laden, calling him a 'lion'. Referring to conditions in Syria, he said it is the 'real jungle out here'.

BRITISH SPY AGENCIES IDENTIFY JAMES FOLEY'S KILLER

MARK HOOKHAM THE TIMES AUGUST 24, 2014. Additional reporting: RICHARD KERBAJ and MARIE WOOLF

Spy agencies have identified James Foley's killer, right. Source: Supplied

MI5 and MI6 have identified the British fighter suspected of murdering the American journalist James Foley, senior UK government sources say.

The masked man with a London accent, who is said to be known to fellow fighters as "Jihadi John", was seen in the shocking video of Foley's death released by the Islamic State extremist army last week. While sources gave no details of the man they have identified, a key suspect is Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, 23, who left his family's million-pound home in Maida Vale, west London, last year. He recently tweeted a picture of himself holding up a severed head.

Writing in The Sunday Times Philip Hammond, the foreign secretary, accuses Foley's killer of "an utter betrayal" of everything the British people stand for. "It is horrifying to think that the perpetrator of this heinous act could have been brought up in Britain," he writes. Mr Hammond says Foley's death "is a reminder to us all that Islamic extremism in Iraq and Syria is not only causing huge suffering in those countries but is also a barbaric ideology threatening us at home".

Unless IS stopped, "sooner or later they will seek to strike us on British soil", Mr Hammond writes. The British extremists who have joined Islamic State "may carry our passport but do not share our values", he adds. The intelligence agencies and police estimate that up to 20 British extremists a month are now travelling to Syria and Iraq to fight with IS. The rate has risen since Isis declared a "caliphate" eight weeks ago.
