

CHALLENGES OF A BYGONE ERA AND NEW HORIZONS

I have penned this to paper in light of personal experiences.

Try as we might, life does not always play the cards we want and therefore we must persevere in the face of the challenges we face on a daily basis and never giving in to adversity.

We go boldly into battle equipped with the weapons we have learnt to use in order to survive.

Peter Adamis 30 March 2016

Life as we know it is governed by our life experiences.

Try as we might challenges in life can become overwhelming

Love, Family, Friends, Cobber Diggers and Mates are all part of the equation

As such we learn to live within the parameters of society in order to survive

In days of old our parents would often speak of a death caused by worry.

Today we are surrounded by stress that infiltrates and reduces our immune system

The food we eat is a conglomeration of preservatives fit for embalming only

Whilst our environment suffers from greed, avarice and downright stupidity

What then can we mere mortals do but fight back vigorously on all platforms

To regain a world that was free of corporation's intent on making profits

May the younger generation take note of our folly and right the wrongs of the past

Otherwise they too will succumb to the nefarious and insoluble evils of a bygone era.

My advice to future generations is to question the paradigms of the past

Create the worlds that you want and do not be seduced by the 'Old Guards'

Throw out the bad and broken crockery along with the soiled linen in the cupboards.

Seek out new territories and horizons that are not contaminated or filled with hate.

Live life according to the natural laws of the universe and allow harmony to reign.
